IMPORTANT THINGS TO CONSIDER

Academic Planning

The importance of getting an early start on planning your study abroad experience is essential. Working with your academic advisor to discuss the courses you can take while studying abroad will help ensure the credits you earn will count toward your degree.

Semester vs. Short-Term Study Abroad vs. Internships

You may think a full semester abroad will automatically be more expensive than a summer option, because of the program length and corresponding fee. However, financial aid and loans are more readily available to you during the academic year. Semester study abroad programs also allow you to work during the summer and save toward your travel costs. If you plan well, your semester abroad can replace a semester on your home campus. The courses you take, whether they are courses in your major, general degree requirements, or electives, should keep you on track to graduate on time.

On the other hand, short-term study abroad, whether it is a summer, January, or inter-term program, may present a better opportunity for you. Your major may make it difficult to stay on track to graduate on time if you try to study abroad for a full semester. A short-term program may also offer a specific academic focus that directly supports your major. These opportunities cost less than semester-long study abroad, simply by virtue of their shorter duration. With many calendar options available, you may also be able to find an inter-term opportunity that will still allow you to work during the summer.

There is also the internship abroad which costs less than most study abroad programs and is offered during the semester or summer. Although the internship is unpaid, we recommend contacting your home campus to see if you can receive academic credit for your work experience or financial aid and loans.

The most important decision is that you go abroad. Regardless of your program's length, your experience abroad will set you apart from the crowd. Only a fraction of U.S. college students go abroad for academic credit. Be sure that you're one of them!

Home School Tuition and Fees

As you look at different program options abroad and costs, consider what you are currently paying at your home institution. If you attend a private college or are an out-of-state student at a public university, you may be paying considerably more per semester than you would pay for a semester-long study abroad or internship abroad program.

If you are an in-state student at a public institution, the cost of a program abroad is comparable in many cases, after you consider tuition and fees, housing, meals and other expenses. Consider commuting costs, along with the out-of-pocket personal expenses that you incur while attending your home institution, and any gap that exists shrinks further.

Federal Financial Aid and Loans

If you are eligible for Federal Financial Aid and/or loans, these funds should be yours to use on your study abroad or internship abroad program. If the academic credit you will earn abroad is approved by your home institution, then your financial aid is available to you. AIFS will work together with you and your study abroad and financial aid offices to help facilitate the use of these funds.

Home Institution or Private Source Grants and Scholarships

Scholarships or grants that you receive from your home institution may be available to you to use on a program abroad. However, oftentimes these funds are only available if you participate on a program run by your home institution. You should discuss the availability of institutional aid with your financial aid and study abroad offices. Grants or scholarships that you receive from sources other than your home school can often be used for study abroad. Check with the source of those funds to inquire about eligibility.

CREATIVE FUNDRAISING

In addition to loans and scholarships, there are several ways for you to fund your time abroad. Below is a list of some basic activities to get started:

Letter writing campaign

- » Reach out to companies and organizations you would like to potentially work for and explain how this experience would be of benefit to them
- » Family and extended family
- » Co-workers
- » Co-workers of family members
- » Church/Religious groups
- » Social organizations (4-H, Kiwanis, Rotary, etc)
- » Greek organizations
- » Students on your campus
- » Friends at other universities

Lifestyle

- » “Keep the change” savings accounts that round up to the nearest dollar on your purchases and put funds directly into a separate savings account
- » Review and alter your daily spending habits to find ways to cut back on your discretionary spending
- » Ask friends and family to give you money or travel-related gifts for holidays and birthdays
- » Consider a part-time job

Crowdfunding

One of the most popular and creative fundraising ideas currently is crowdfunding, which is the practice of raising small money from numerous people to fund a project (in this case study or internship abroad). Previous AIFS Abroad participants have had success from this practice and raised thousands of dollars toward their program fees. Most sites charge either a per-donation or one-time fee for using their service and students should research the crowdsourcing platforms available to determine which site best suits their needs. Once you have a personalized crowdfunding website, you should share the link on social media platforms to spread the word. You can also consider getting business cards made that you can pass out to everyone. Strangers are often willing to donate to your cause if you have a compelling story and you're only asking for $2. Every dollar counts.

With the ever-rising cost of higher education, it is no surprise that students are concerned about how to pay for study or internship abroad programs. Choosing the program that is right for you academically and financially is essential. In addition to comparing program prices, it is equally important to compare what is included in the program fee.

For nearly sixty years, AIFS has crafted programs abroad of the highest quality that include everything you need. We can help you plan your experience every step of the way.

AIFS Abroad programs are designed to include:

- » Academic program/transcript
- » Housing
- » Meal plan or subsidy offered in certain locations
- » Program advising
- » On-site Resident Director or location staff
- » Organized activities and field excursions
- » Comprehensive insurance and 24/7 assistance
- » Published program fees guaranteed not to increase
- » Optional air travel arrangements with London stopover included on many programs
- » Grants and scholarships opportunities

THE COST OF NOT GOING ABROAD

Consider the career implications of what may be a once-in-a-lifetime educational experience. In today's global economy, students who go abroad add a dimension to their education that sets them apart as they compete in the job market. Now more than ever, employers realize the added value of prospective candidates who have international experience.

Success in today's global marketplace demands:

- » increased adaptability
- » cross-cultural sensitivity
- » political awareness
- » intellectual flexibility

Programs abroad can provide you with a road map for developing these skill sets. When a college abroad experience is on your resume, it not only tells employers something about your academic achievements, but also about your personal ambition and determination.
